Introduction to Malware

Malicious software, better known as malware, has become a central element in not just cybersecurity but daily life. It has played a role in everything from our politics to our economy, to our personal lives. However, it remains a poorly understood and reported subject. This course provides a clear and comprehensive introduction to malware and how to defend against it.

1. Identify how malware attacks systems
2. Describe the different components of malware
3. Explain how malware gets onto computers and how it gets executed
4. List the different types of malware
5. Identify different tools and strategies to protect against malware
6. Explain what to do if infected by malware

Course is completely online - $79

Estimated time to complete is 5 hours

Access time is 90 days

Sneak peek photos of the new makerspace area

Although we don't have a specific date for relocation of the makerspace from the Berg Building to the newly renovated Freudenthal Library, we were able to get some updated photos of the area. The makerspace will be located on the 3rd floor of the library in two adjoining rooms
